This unique photograph which resembles a gigantic sunburst design, was made last week looking south towards the dome of the High Flux Beam Reactor. According to meteorology, the design was caused by a once-in-a-lifetime cloud formation for which they have no explanation. For the technically-minded, the clouds in the picture are cirro-cummulus at a height above 20,000 feet. The clouds lie in regularly spaced parallel bands running in a north-south direction with clear blue sky in between. Because of perspective, which makes the parallel bands appear to converge at a distance, the clouds appear to radiate from a single point on the southern horizon.

L.I. Oil Shortage Hits Lab Over Holiday Weekend

Icy blasts and low fuel reserves, combined with the inability of a major supplier to make deliveries to Brookhaven Lab, caused a heating emergency over the Washington's Birthday holiday weekend.

Heating and air-conditioning units were turned down to shut off in many areas, and not turned on again until moderating weather and fuel deliveries on Monday eased the emergency situation.

The Laboratory, which normally stores more than 650,000 gallons of fuel oil in 3large tanks, had not received a delivery of oil since February 8. A token amount was delivered on Friday, February 16, when only an 81/2-day supply remained.

On Thursday night temperatures had dropped, wind had increased to gale force, and by Friday morning snow and sleet were the order of the day. By Friday afternoon, all of the steam absorption air-conditioning units were shut down, and thermostats in non-critical buildings were reduced to minimum points.

After 5 p.m., all thermostats in office buildings were turned down to 50 degrees, and only buildings having plants and animals, and temperature-dependent experiments in progress, were maintained at normal levels. Of course, the hospital area was kept up to its regular standards.

The cold weather persisted thru Sunday, and only started to abate early on Monday morning. After an emergency meeting with representatives of the major fuel supplier, tanker trucks rolled into the Lab and made a sizable delivery of oil.

During the two days of fuel conservation efforts, more than 5,000 gallons had been saved for each 24-hour period, almost enough to fill two large tank trucks used to deliver No. 6 oil to the Lab steam plant. The immediate emergency was over, but the future of oil deliveries on Long Island is still uncertain.

In spite of the recent deliveries and the success of the conservation program, the danger of future shortages will not end until either the termination of the heating season, or the demand and supply for fuel levels off.

On a personal level, there are steps that can be taken by all employees to stave off the day of reckoning for a little longer.

When leaving the office or shop at the end of the day, and especially on weekends, turn down the thermostat by at least 5 to 6 degrees. If an office or lab is not to be used for a long period, turn the heat down even lower. Avoid the competition of air conditioning and heating - turn off one or the other if not needed.

Basketball

In games played last week the Circuits (2-1) handed AMD (1-2) its second straight loss in second half play. John Schmidt led the winners with 19 points. Les Lawrence paced AMD with 10 points. AMD's team captain attributes the loss to poor shooting and rebounding and too much Schmidt

The Stealers moving right along with a perfect 3-0 record, destroyed Physics (0-3) 46 to 24 to retain first place in their league. Hot shooting Larry Johnson scored 14 points for the Stealers. Cool veteran Jack Brennan also chipped in with 7 points for the winners. Dick Sutter scored 6 points in a losing cause for Physics.

In the Brookhaven League the Knacks (2-1) put it all together finally to score an impresive 51 to 27 victory over Biology (1-2). The Knack scoring was evenly distributed among Bob Casey, Ed Gill, Dean Easler and Dennis Nordstrom. Tom Jesaitis carried the bulk of Bio's scoring as he sank 21 points.

In the last game of the night the youthful Tandems (3-0) romped over Medical (0-3) 60 to 34. Leroy James scored 18 points for Tandem as he was getting some good assists from his team mate Jim Garrison who is one of the best guards in the league and an excellent team player. Mac Thomas led Medical with 10 points and aging Bob Brown gave it the old college try with plenty of hustle on both ends of the court.

Bulletin Publication Schedule is Changed

In order to operate more economically and remove the need for scheduled overtime, the Bulletin will be published on Friday of each week instead of Thursday.

Deadlines for classified ads will change because of the new publication date, and ads will now be due before noon on Monday. The new deadline will also allow more complete coverage of events that happen in the beginning of each week, and prevent delays in publication because of the new Monday holidays.

Stories and announcements will be received in the editorial office up to noon on Tuesday. Distribution will be made in the first mail on Friday morning.
